

Call for Papers and Other Contributions

Registering Accomplishment What's Possible Now?

I am honored to co-author this Call for Papers. Over the past several years, as a direct result of being involved in this community, I have become deeply engaged in creating a new paradigm in the world of mental health. Working to fulfill this commitment, while it is not nearly complete, has made a difference and left me in a new world with new problems and new openings to act.

Two years ago, I took on the transformation of our conversations about mental health; today I am someone who is recognized and sought after for that contribution. I am challenged daily both in being with the current state of the world and being with the progress of my commitment. Pretending I like everything that is happening glosses over what is not working. And while certain things are not working, real work has been accomplished that is worth noting, even celebrating.

Accomplishment, when not ignored or discounted, calls for new language, new listening, and new actions. What we say about what has happened has consequences. We could use where we have fallen short as an excuse for stopping, or we could notice, by registering the accomplishment, that we now have even greater openings to act. In registering accomplishment, we become available to see things we were not able to see and say things we were not able to say; we have new opportunities to play, to add existence and membership, and to restore and create integrity.

This year we invite you to submit a paper, poster, Report from the Field, breakout session or artwork based on your experience living in the world where the commitments you have created are alive, unfolding and developing. Ideal topics are those that acknowledge, celebrate, and strengthen your creations, as well as share the possibilities and futures you can now see and develop.

— Fred Moss, MD

Papers, Reports from the Field, breakout sessions, posters and artwork could address some of the following investigations:

- What has been accomplished? Who have you become standing in what has been accomplished?
- What problems have you transformed into opportunities to fulfill your commitment for the world?
- What has become possible for you, as an individual, recognizing accomplishment? What has become possible for your groups, teams and communities, recognizing accomplishment?
- Standing in what has been accomplished, what can you say now? What can you stand for now? What's next?

See the reverse for guidelines for contributions. If you would like support with making your submission, please email our content team at cgtcontent@landmarkworldwide.com.

Journal of the Conference for Global Transformation

Papers—Submissions close October 1, 2020

Journal papers provide authors with an opportunity to articulate their research, inquiries, ideas, practices, philosophies, views, work, artistic endeavors, successes and failures on topics related to the theme of the conference as expressed in this Call for Papers. Submissions must be completed drafts of original work, no longer than 5,000 words. Papers are reviewed by an editorial committee and publication in the Journal of the Conference for Global Transformation may be subject to recommended revisions.

Awards. The authors of the top papers will be invited to present at the conference; presenters are expected to attend the conference as registered participants. To submit your paper, go to WisdomCGT.com, click on "Play a Key Role" and choose "Write a Journal Paper." A more comprehensive guide for authors is available there. You will be advised of acceptance by November 18, 2020.

Discoveries from the Inquiries. If you have participated in one or more of the Inquiries of the Social Commons, we invite you to submit a paper or Report from the Field. You could report on what you, or your group, have discovered, encountered or want to contribute from your inquiries. Follow the guidelines for writing a paper or submitting a Report from the Field.

Reports from the Field—Submissions close January 15, 2021

A Report from the Field is an opportunity to contribute to others by sharing about living with, and engaging in, your commitments for the world. We invite you to submit a report of up to 1,500 words about what you have discovered, accomplished or learned regarding your commitments. For more information, or to submit your proposal, go to WisdomCGT.com. Click on "Play a Key Role" and select "Write a Report from the Field." You will be advised of acceptance by February 28, 2021.

Workshops—Submissions close October 1, 2020

Workshops, typically led by one to three people, are intended to have participants investigate topics related to the theme of the conference. Successful sessions tend to include inquiry and provide access to new contexts, thinking, ideas, practices and performance regarding matters the session leaders and participants care about, are committed to, or wish to make real in the world.

Panel Sessions have three or more people giving short presentations on topics related to the theme of the conference. The presentations may be followed by questions, discussion or inquiry.

Eligibility. Each workshop or panel session presenter must be a Wisdom Unlimited graduate who has attended the Conference for Global Transformation as a registered participant at least once.

Submit your proposal online at WisdomCGT.com. Click on "Play a Key Role" and select "Lead a Breakout Session." More information is available there. You will be advised of acceptance by November 18, 2020. All breakout session presenters are expected to attend the conference as registered participants.

Posters—Submissions close March 1, 2021, or when capacity is reached.

We invite proposals for posters that address the conference theme or any other aspect of formulating and implementing a commitment for the world. It is an opportunity to display whatever you are at work on and a great way to talk about things you have discovered, learned or accomplished, including issues you are encountering or ideas you have. Poster presenters must be registered into the 2021 conference to submit a proposal. For more information, and to submit your proposal, go to WisdomCGT.com. Click on "Play a Key Role" and select "Present a Poster." You will be notified of acceptance no later than March 15, 2021.

Artists for Global Transformation—Submissions close January 15, 2021

We invite proposals from artists to show their work at an art exhibition. Submissions should address the conference theme and will be selected by an independent panel. Artists must be registered into the 2021 conference to submit a proposal. This is an opportunity for Wisdom graduates to impact the global audience with your art. To submit your proposal, go to WisdomCGT.com. Click on "Play a Key Role" and select "Artists for Global Transformation." More information is available there. You will be advised of acceptance by February 14, 2021.
